CHINUA ACHEBE

The African Trilogy

Things Fall Apart; Arrow of God; No Longer at Ease

Introduction and Notes by the Translator

The African Trilogy is a collection of three novels by one of the most influential African novelists of all time. In many respects they are regarded as the most important works of post-colonial African literature. In Things Fall Apart, the role of the Igbo traditional society is examined as it reacts to the arrival of the British. The ensuing struggle for power and control results in a clash between the traditional and the modern. The novel is a powerful critique of the impact of Western colonialism on African culture and society.

The trilogy opens with Things Fall Apart, set in the late 19th century, when the Igbo kingdom of Umuahia is being invaded by the British. The novel contrasts the traditional Igbo society with the new colonial order, and highlights the conflict between tradition and modernity.

Arrow of God presents a more detailed exploration of the impact of colonialism on Igbo society. The novel follows Ezeulu, the chief priest, as he struggles to maintain his authority in the face of Western influence.

No Longer at Ease takes up the ongoing conflict between continuity and change as Ezeulu, the chief priest, finds his authority is being challenged by Western ideas and practices.
