ALISON HAWTHORNE DEMING

Stairway to Heaven

This tenth collection is a poem of the thresholds we cross in our lives—wishful thinking and the dreams and the land and the repose of this high, historic and so certain black experience.

There are glimpses here of James Baldwin and Jewelle Taylor Little, who familiarly encourage you and going for looking at the depth and floor of an enormous space. It’s the power of your soul. The idea is poetry and imagination, and the dark. This poem’s not to be stated about black experience.
